ELECTROPHOT
MODEL M-S-B
EXPOSURE METER

Now has Direct reading for
KODACHROME Film as well as
Black and White for both
Movies and Stills

The increasing use of Kodachrome Film demands an exposure meter to use with this film in the simplest possible way. The new ELECTROPHOT fully meets this demand. Point the meter at the scene to be taken and read the Red Scale. Nothing could be simpler. In all ELECTROPHOT models it has been our aim to supply a meter easy, quick and convenient to use and this policy has been followed in producing this model.

In addition to direct reading in "f" stops for Kodachrome it also reads direct for black and white film for both movies and stills as before. It is held in a natural manner, and the scene reflected in a view finder, just the same as holding and using a still camera. There are no wheels or dials to turn and in the great majority of cases no calculations of any kind to make. Just read the scale.

A genuine leather carrying case is available, which is so arranged that the ELECTROPHOT may be used without removing from the case and even if removed the carrying strap prevents the loss of either the meter or the case.

The Dial as shown above has three scales. The upper scale in red is for Kodachrome, the upper black scale for black and white movie film and the lower scale for black and white still film. The calibrations on each of the scales are widely spaced, and can be easily read under practically any light conditions.

Electrophot depends only on the ability to see the subject in the Reflex view-finder. The Rhamstine Electronic photocell does the rest. The needle instantly indicates the lens setting—and that's all there is to it.
